It goes without saying that, if you're planning a trip to Europe, you're going to want to get the best airfare. It's certainly feasible to find discounted airfare to Europe on the Internet and save yourself a bunch of money.

First, it's important to know that there can be hidden costs associated with discount airfares. The price that you first see on the screen is not necessarily the full price. In a lot of cases there are still taxes and fees that will be added. An additional cost can be travel insurance however, this is optional Continue to click through the screens stopping just shy of entering your credit card details. That page should display the final cost of your airfare.

Most European countries are fairly small, making the continent feel fairly compact. At times it can be significantly less expensive to arrive at a nearby airport and then go on to your destination by either bus or train. If the website you're using to check airfares allows you to, get it to include airports within a 100-mile radius. You might just find a real bargain this way.

A train or bus ride to your planned destination can add to the enjoyment of your vacation Often, with discount airfares, you'll find yourself flying into a small town. You might just discover a hidden treasure this way. A cute place you may never have discovered otherwise.

If you choose an airport in a different country from your actual destination, just be sure that you have any visas that are required for both countries. Carefully review all of the costs, not just the cheap airfare. Add up the airfare, train or bus fare and any possible accommodation amount should you need to stay somewhere before reaching your destination. Bus and train fares can fluctuate wildly depending on which European country you're traveling in. You need to add up all the costs to determine if you're getting a better deal.

Getting discount airfares usually means you'll be flying with a "no-frills" airline. Don't expect things like in-flight meals or movies. Be prepared and pack your own snacks to take onboard.

Be sure to read any fine print when booking your discounted airfare to Europe. There are some pricing structures that apply exclusively to European residents. Try to book well in advance to get the best prices. There are times when you can get some pretty spectacular last-minute deals, but it's a roll-of-the-dice. Odds are you'll end up paying a much higher price if you wait too long.
